Attack on Dog Devastates Couple

by Elizabeth Regan

Bill Barrows said it was over in seconds.

That's how long it took for a Portland Rottweiler to grab Barrows' four-pound Yorkshire terrier, Lizzie, and shake her to death on a dusky afternoon in mid-November, he recounted this week.

Barrows said he was walking his small two dogs on the sidewalk in front of a four-family rental home on 380 Main St. when the Rottweiler escaped from the front porch.

Barrows had already scooped up eight-year-old Lola and was reaching out for four-year-old Lizzie at the moment the dog attacked, he said.

The Rottweiler's owner rushed out, striking the large dog with his fist until Lizzie was released.

A report from Animal Control Officer Karen Perruccio identified the owner as Ronald Wilcox and his dog as Jake.

Jake's leash had been secured under Wilcox's foot before the dog got away, according to the report.

Barrows described rushing home to 350 Main St., where his wife, Ann, administered mouth-to-mouth to an unresponsive Lizzie.

"I knew in my heart the dog was gone," Barrows said. But the couple got in their car and took her to Pieper Memorial Veterinary Center in Middletown anyway.

Several subsequent attempts at resuscitation by veterinary technicians were unsuccessful.

Perruccio said the dog was not licensed or up to date on rabies vaccinations. She issued Wilcox tickets for both infractions, as well as one for having a nuisance dog.

Jake was put on a two-week quarantine at Wilcox's residence because he didn't have a current rabies shot, according to Perruccio. State law permits animal control officers to allow home quarantine in cases where dog bites occur on the owner's property.

The dog must also be leashed and muzzled for the rest of its life, Perruccio said.

A nuisance dog is described in state statute as one with a "vicious disposition" or one that barks too much. A first-time offender gets a ticket, while any subsequent violations of nuisance dog laws are treated as misdemeanor crimes. At that point, decisions regarding the "restraint or disposal" of the dog may be made by a judge.

In a brief response this week, Wilcox said Jake has never done anything like this before.

"I regret what happened," he said. "And I'm complying with everything that the state's asked me to do."

Perruccio, who has been an animal control officer for 10 years, said she had not received any complaints about Jake before or since the November attack on the Barrows' dog.

She emphasized the importance of reporting any attacks when they happen, adding that there are more enforcement options available for subsequent offenses.

"If people report it, we can use the laws that we have," she said.

Marlborough Needs Green for Its Gathering

by Julianna Roche

With just one week left before the town's Gathering on the Green event, the Marlborough Volunteer Fire Department (MVFD) is still seeking more than $3,000 in donations needed to meet the $5,000 used to put on the annual holiday celebration – which includes a lighted fire truck parade, Christmas tree lighting and fireworks display.

As of Thursday morning, the MVFD had raised $1,930, according to their Go Fund Me page – an amount Rescue Captain Mark Merritt said is "far lower" than what the fire department had collected at this point last year.

Indeed, in 2016, the MVFD had hit the $2,000 mark three weeks before the event, giving them enough time to raise the full amount – though, Merritt noted, even that goal was reached "at the last minute."

Whatever is not raised by the day of the event – scheduled this year for Saturday, Dec. 9 at 4:30 p.m. – is paid for by the MVFD.

Merritt, who leads the fundraising and organizing efforts along with Fire Marshal Joe Asklar, said he wasn't sure why contributions have been much slower this year, but still expects this year's celebration to draw in even more people than last year's 1,800 to 2,000 attendees. He said attendance grows each year.

Three years ago, Asklar explained that the holiday event actually almost failed – with nothing more than simple Christmas tree lighting and no more than 25 residents in attendance.

"There was no firetruck parade, no music. It was just a little get-together, but the members of the fire department said 'this could be a fantastic thing,'" he said, adding that each year, changes have been made to the event to make it more "spectacular."

Standing by a "bigger and better" motto, Asklar added that this year's event will include a more elaborate fire truck parade, with fire trucks from six neighboring towns, and an "even bigger" fireworks show than in the past.

In addition to pictures with Santa, a reading of The Polar Express, holiday games and activities, music, snacks and refreshments, the MVFD also chooses a "special family" each year to flip the switch for the Christmas tree.

Bill Barrows conceded he failed to report an earlier attack by Jake that he said occurred about six months ago as he was walking Lola in front of the Barrows' home. That's when he heard the large dog rushing up behind him on the sidewalk.

"I scooped up my dog, held her against my chest, trying to get away from the dog," Barrows said. Then the larger dog ripped the leash out of his hand and dislodged Lola's collar from around her head, according to Barrows.

He said Wilcox had to tackle Jake to halt the attack.

The couple has hired a lawyer to recoup veterinary bills and the roughly $1,500 cost of the dog, they said. Letters will be sent to Wilcox as well as the owner of the rental property.

The 1839 home is owned by Frederick Scribner, of Hartford. Scribner declined to comment this week.

"We're brokenhearted," Ann Barrows said. "In my opinion, you can't replace perfect – which is how we felt about her."

Ann Barrows plans to advocate for a stronger stance in state law regarding dog-on-dog attacks.

"In the state of Connecticut, [you] can get away with dog killing dog and there's no repercussions. They don't even have to be quarantined. And that's what bothers us," she said.

Local Ordinance

East Main Street resident Sara Sterry Rutter has been a proponent for revising local laws regulating roaming and vicious dogs.

Rutter, who has two large dogs that she admits "tend to bark," has been on both sides of dog-related complaints.

She said a pit bull being walked on the sidewalk in front of her property attacked her basenji in her front yard. On another occasion, both her basenji and Labrador/Rottweiler mix were accused of causing damage to a dog walking by.

Rutter has advocated in front of the Board of Selectmen on multiple occasions this year to strengthen local ordinance by clarifying definitions and provisions, as well as making sure it is in line with state statute.

Clarification of the ordinance would ensure everyone is treated according to the same specific set of rules, she said.

An updated ordinance would also make it easier for people to understand what their rights and responsibilities are when it comes to owning a dog.

Some of the issue, she said, also goes back to a prominent question in town: Does responsibility for what happens on sidewalks belong to the abutting property owner or the town?

"We have to have some clarification here. This has to do with public space, private property and overall public safety," she said. "What are the property owner's rights? What are the dog walker's rights?"

Portland ordinance regarding roaming and nuisance dogs was added to the town law books in 2000.

First Selectwoman Susan Bransfield said this week she will be reviewing the ordinance, speaking with the police department and animal control officers, and bringing the roaming and nuisance issue to selectmen at their regular meeting on Dec. 20.

Asked by the Rivereast if she plans to form a panel to decide if Jake should be deemed vicious, she said she would "certainly consider it."

She said she has already spoken to Bill Barrows and plans to get more information from him in the coming weeks.

"I'm very grateful that Mr. Barrows had the interest and fortitude to come forward and let people know," Bransfield said.

Bill and Ann Barrows said this week it's been difficult coming to terms with the fact that their dog is considered property in the eyes of the law.

"You get so attached. Now that we're older and the kids are gone, this is our big deal. It makes it a hard thing to handle," Bill Barrows said.

Portland's Law on Vicious Dogs

Portland's local law regarding vicious dogs came about in 2000 because the number of "unprovoked attacks by vicious dogs" was increasing across the country at a time when existing laws didn't deal adequately with the threat, according to the ordinance's stated purpose.

The local law specifies:

- A dog cannot be identified as vicious based on "past behavior or propensity" alone, according to ordinance. It's up to a three-member panel composed of the first selectman, a state-licensed veterinarian and a public health official to make that determination as part of a public hearing.

- The panel can be convened by the first selectman once an animal control officer has probable cause to believe the dog is vicious.

- The ordinance defines a vicious dog as one that bites, inflicts injury, assaults or otherwise attacks a human being or domestic animal without provocation on public or private property.

- A dog is not considered vicious under the ordinance if the animal harms someone who came onto the property to commit a crime, or if the dog was being teased, tormented, abused or assaulted before it attacked.

- Dogs deemed vicious must be confined to a locked enclosure and may only be let out under direct supervision. Outside of the enclosure, vicious dogs must be muzzled and attached to a chain-type leash no longer than 3-feet long. The owner is required by the ordinance to post warning signs on the property.

- If a dog identified by animal control as vicious is found unattended out of its enclosure, unmuzzled, or unleashed, it is to be impounded for two weeks. If it's impounded twice, local law allows the "expeditious and humane" killing of the dog pending a hearing before local officials. The dog owner is also entitled to a hearing before the commissioner of the state Department of Agriculture.

- The ordinance also allows the town to put down a dog already deemed vicious if the animal wounds or kills a person or domestic animal. The owner may appeal the decision to the Department of Agriculture.

Observations & Ruminations

by Mike Thompson

I hope you all had happy Thanksgivings last week; that you ate well, rested well, made some great memories with friends and family – and, who knows, that you maybe even started on early Christmas shopping, if that's your thing. (I typically wait until mid-December to start it; hey, I'm a guy.)

I spent last week in the warmth and sunlight of California, visiting family for the holiday. It was a wonderful time, and when Thanksgiving rolled around I ate quite well indeed. (Bacon-wrapped turkey. Need I say more?) Major tip of the hat to reporter Elizabeth Regan, by the way, for filling in for me at the paper last week.

Anyway, while I may have taken a vacation last week, here's one thing that didn't: the seemingly-endless amount of sexual assault/harassment allegations against everyone from movie stars to TV news anchors to U.S. senators to even Ryan Seacrest.

Republicans gleefully jumped on the Al Franken news. And I have to admit, it doesn't look good for Franken. As more allegations come forth about him, I unfortunately can't see how this ends in anything less than a resignation.

Still, at least the Franken news gave Republicans at least a more relevant rebuttal. Ever since the Roy Moore news broke, many Republicans cried, "But what about Bill Clinton?" That was more than 20 years ago, and there's also the little matter of Clinton not running for the U.S. Senate. Of course, beating on Clinton also gave Republicans an opportunity to beat on Hillary too and they never miss a chance to do that, because evidently Election Day 2016 hasn't happened yet and there's still a chance that lying bitch might win.

As for the Hollywood actors and personalities, it seems that every day another one gets alleged of assault or harassment. And fast work is being made of their careers in response. Which makes me wonder: Why is it that folks like Kevin Spacey and Jeffrey Tambor are losing their movie and TV gigs – and yet Donald Trump still gets to be president of the United States?

* * *

Speaking of Trump: Does he have to embarrass himself, and by extension the office of the presidency, on a daily basis?

Monday, as I'm sure many of you have heard by now, a ceremony was held at the White House to honor Navajo veterans of World War II. Which seems like a pretty simple thing to not screw up. Say some nice words, shake hands, take pictures, and move on to the next appointment, controversy-free.

But that's not our Donny.

No, Trump had to kick off his comments with one of his favorite jabs: referring to Sen.

Elizabeth Warren as "Pocahontas." He used the term time and time again during his presidential campaign to try to disparage Warren, a Democrat. In 2012, when she was running for Senate, a story broke that in the 1990s, Warren was listed by Harvard Law School, where she was a member of the faculty, as being an American Indian. Warren, who was born in Oklahoma, has said she had maternal ancestors that were members of the Cherokee and Delaware tribes; she based this assertion on "family lore." No concrete proof has yet to surface proving that Warren does indeed have Native American ancestry.

So Trump continues to pounce, calling her "Pocahontas" to make fun of her for one time claiming to be Native American – because apparently Pocahontas is the only female Native American he knows of (note to Mr. President: Pocahontas was Powhatan, not Cherokee), and because apparently the whole thing is so gosh-darn hilarious.

Trump was soundly criticized by, well, just about everyone for this "Pocahontas" crack during, of all things, a ceremony to honor Native Americans. Sarah Huckabee Sanders – she knows what she signed on for – immediately rushed to Trump's defense, saying that she feels "what most people find offensive is Sen. Warren lying about her heritage to advance her career." (Warren has denied using it to advance her career, and there's no concrete proof of that either.)

Perhaps the harshest rebukes of Trump came from Native Americans themselves. Jacqueline Pata, executive director of the National Congress of American Indians, said, "For Indian Country, which has a very high level of participation in the military and veterans' service, it was a real honor to be at that event today, and it is unfortunate that it was used as an opportunity to once again try to use the word 'Pocahontas' in a negative way towards a political adversary."

Russell Begaye, president of the Navajo Nation, said Trump's use of the name was "derogatory" and "disrespectful to Indian nations."

"The campaign is over," Begaye said. "The nation needs to move forward, and using Native Americans in this way, in this type of honoring setting is something that should not be happening."

It shouldn't be happening, but it is – and it will likely continue. Trump was elected president more than a year ago, folks; the hopes that he'd change once he won are most certainly dashed by now. What we saw in 2015 and 2016 is what we're seeing today. Only now it's as president of the United States.

What a sad, embarrassing thought.

* * *

See you next week.

Annie Takes the Stage This Weekend in East Hampton

by Elizabeth Regan

For a lot of people, just seeing these song titles in print will be enough to keep them humming all day long: “Tomorrow,” “You’re Never Fully Dressed Without a Smile,” and “It’s a Hard Knock Life.”

But Podium Players Director Patrique Hurd promised that watching this weekend’s live performances of the musical Annie at East Hampton High School will yield an even more enthusiastic, nostalgic and immersive experience.

“It’s a great holiday show and everybody knows the tunes,” Hurd said. “I’m sure by bows, everybody’s going to be singing ‘Tomorrow’ at the top of their lungs.”

With its origin in the Little Orphan Annie comic strip that brightened newspaper pages from 1924-2010, the musical first hit the stage on Broadway in 1977. It ran for almost six years.

The musical follows Annie as she gets a temporary reprieve from the orphanage run by evil Miss Hannigan. The break comes after she manages to score an invitation from billionaire Oliver “Daddy” Warbucks to spend Christmas at his mansion.

The multi-generational cast boasts 19 children as orphans, an adult ensemble that includes a handful of teenagers, and several adult lead actors.

Mary Rainville, an East Hampton High School freshman, will play the recognizable red-haired, red-dressed title character.

Rainville has been acting since she was about four years old, a pastime she enjoys because it gives her the opportunity to become someone she’s not.

“I’m an awkward person. I’m bad at speaking,” she said of her real-life persona.

Acknowledging the irony inherent in making herself the center of attention on stage, she said it works because she doesn’t have to come up with the words on her own.

“They give me the lines,” she laughed.

And while she can’t exactly relate to Annie’s experience as a parentless 11-year-old in the 1930s, she said the plucky and positive little girl “is a fun character to play.”

Hurd said the Podium Players board of directors chose the musical Annie because of its large cast, room for a lot of children, and its holiday theme.

“Annie takes place around Christmas and ends on Christmas Day, so it’s very seasonal and very timely,” she said. “Plus, everybody loves to see their children do shows.”

This is Hurd’s first show with the Podium Players. With a degree in theater, she has supplemented a day job in medical administration with numerous creative endeavors through the years and across the state.

Hurd owned a production company based out of the former Marco Polo Restaurant in East Hartford that put on original, interactive dinner theater productions for a decade. She also works as a performer at the Connecticut Renaissance Faire, with whom she also serves as the education coordinator.

No stranger to Annie, she said she has both directed and acted in the musical.

“I played Miss Hannigan, the bad guy,” she said. “That’s my specialty. I’m a villain.”

It was Hurd who made the decision to cast a human in the part of Sandy, the dog, due to a dearth of acting dogs and an abundance of acting kids.

Klara Cygas, 9, plays the canine in a fluffy, light brown costume made for her by her mother.

Cygas has performed for three years in the East Hampton-based Young People’s Center for Creative Arts.

She is currently a fourth-grade student at Center School in East Hampton.

“I mostly like to act when there’s singing in it. I just sing all the time,” Cygas said, before pausing to add this giggled caveat: “I don’t sing in front of the boys in my class, though.”

Hurd said the show, which is under the musical direction of Kristine Pekar, features about eight people playing a dozen instruments.

“We have wonderful live musicians,” she said. “The show sounds terrific.”

Podium Players started in 1959 as a Hebron-based barbershop quartet and has grown into a well-established community theater program in East Hampton.

According to Hurd, what’s missing now is a dedicated space for the nonprofit group.

“Their biggest difficulty is the fact that they do not have their own venue. It would be great if the community got together and perhaps tried to see about raising funds to get them some place that’s their own,” she said.

The group currently practices at the high school, middle school and library community room as space and time allows. Props and costumes are stored in member’s homes and garages.

“It’s just a lot easier when you keep things in one place,” Hurd said.

The production will begin tonight at 7 p.m. It will continue Saturday, Dec. 2, at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m., with a final performance Sunday, Dec. 3 at 2 p.m. Tickets may be purchased online at podiumplayers.org for $15/adult and $12/students and seniors. Tickets will be available at the door.

Yankees Cap Leads to Carjacking Arrest in East Hampton

by Elizabeth Regan

Based on DNA evidence from a New York Yankees baseball cap, East Hampton Police last week arrested an East Haven man in connection with an armed carjacking on Haddam Neck Road in March.

Edward Richkowski, 45, is alleged to have jumped into the driver’s seat of a Subaru Legacy and taken off after a brief struggle with the owner’s friend, according to the arrest warrant affidavit. DNA from the baseball cap that fell off the suspect’s head during the scuffle was sent to the state toxicology lab and ultimately used to identify Richkowski, police said.

Richkowski was charged with first-degree robbery, carjacking, second-degree larceny, third-degree assault, second-degree threatening and carrying a pistol without a permit. He was also charged with four separate counts of failure to appear stemming from burglary charges in the shoreline area.

Meghan O’Brien’s car was running in the driveway of her 12 Haddam Neck Rd. residence as she loaded it up for a trip to Pennsylvania on March 17, the affidavit said. She had about $350 in a pouch in the front seat and $500, plus concert tickets, in the backseat. Her friend, Walter “McBride” Willis, told police there was $7,500 in cash in a backpack he had intended to use to purchase a silk screening business.

O’Brien told officers she noticed a man in a gray hoodie walking toward Route 151 near her house around 2:45 p.m., according to the affidavit. She said the stranger asked her if everything was okay, to which she replied she was fine – then the man ran to the car and jumped in.

The affidavit said both O’Brien and Willis told police they ran toward the car, with O’Brien opening the driver’s side backdoor to try to get her belongings while Willis opened the driver’s door and attempted to grab the keys out of the ignition. Willis told officers the man elbowed him in the face numerous times before saying “I’ll f—ing shoot you” and then pointing a handgun at him.

The car went south on Haddam Neck Road, police said. About two hours later, after officers had initiated interviews with witnesses and started a search, the car was located on Basket Shop Road in Haddam Neck. Of the money, O’Brien’s $300 was still in the front seat, the affidavit said, but about $8,000 had allegedly been taken from the back.

East Hampton police dog Ardo and Connecticut State Police canine Brutus were unable to track the suspect from the recovered vehicle, according to the affidavit. Police said they were not able to find any fingerprints from the suspect, either.

It wasn’t until Oct. 18 that toxicology results came back identifying Richkowski’s DNA as part of the mixture found on the Yankees hat, the affidavit said.

Police said Richkowski submitted to a comparative DNA test, the results of which have not yet been received, and invoked his Miranda rights on Oct. 19. Though he refused to give a statement without a lawyer present, police said he provided his cell phone number.

Subsequent investigation revealed several phone calls were made on his cell phone within the vicinity of the robbery around the same time, according to the affidavit.

Police said Richkowski has a criminal record going back 25 years, with misdemeanor and felony convictions for third-degree burglary, possession of narcotics and possession of marijuana.

State Judicial Branch records show Richkowski had been arrested two times in August on a host of charges, including third-degree burglary and resisting arrest.

According to the Shoreline Times, Richkowski was apprehended on Aug. 14 in a large marsh where he was hiding as police officers from Guilford, Madison, North Branford, the Connecticut State Police and the Department of Energy and Environmental Protection searched from land and air.

The Shoreline Times reported in September that Richkowski was being investigated for possible involvement in a spate of residential burglaries in Madison, Guilford and neighboring towns.

The East Hampton investigation remains open, the affidavit said.

Richkowski is currently being held on $250,000 at MacDougall-Walker Correctional Institution in Suffield.

Bourbeau Appointed as Finance Board Alternate in Marlborough

by Julianna Roche

Resident Deborah Bourbeau may have struck out at the polls on Election Day last month, but she's a new member of the Board of Finance anyway.

Bourbeau was appointed Nov. 21 to fill a vacant alternate position on the finance board – a seat left open after former alternate Ryan Gritter moved to another town.

Deborah Bourbeau

Her term runs through 2019.

Bourbeau, an Independent who ran on the Democratic ticket, was vying for one of two open full seats on the finance board in the Nov. 7 election. She lost her bid by a mere 19 votes, a tally that held up at the following week's recount.

However, with the alternate vacancy available thanks to Gritter's departure, the Board of Selectmen appointed Bourbeau last week to the board.

"I'm excited to be able to serve," she said this week, adding she felt "truly grateful" for everyone who backed her during the campaign and voters who have since voiced their support of her serving on the board.

"I feel like I can make a difference," Bourbeau added. "I said when I ran I would not play politics because in small towns, politics shouldn't be an issue. We're all friends and neighbors, and all living in the same town so no matter what affiliation we are, we have to work together."

Having been a Marlborough resident for 42 years and a Marlborough Elementary School (MES) teacher for 35, Bourbeau said she feels her longtime involvement in town and her background will be assets to the board, having obtained master's degree in mathematics and managing financials in her own household for years.

"It'll take a meeting or two to listen to what's been going on and where we're headed [and then] hopefully I can give a valuable contribution," she continued.

Board of Finance Chairman Doug Knowlton – who said he's known Bourbeau for years, both personally and as a former teacher to his own children – said this week that the new alternate's "strongly opinionated" nature will bring a new and "quite historical" perspective to the board.

"To me it was a no-brainer – why wouldn't you appoint the one other person that was willing to run [for the finance board]?" Knowlton said, adding that Bourbeau's input will be valuable while the town is "facing some tough times coming up" in terms of setting future town budgets.

With her first Board of Finance meeting as an alternate approaching on Dec. 13, Bourbeau said her main concern while seated will be to work closely with fellow board members to come up with "creative solutions" to solving the budget crisis.

"I'm still concerned with the state budget and how much money is being withheld from the towns, and where that money is going to come from," she said, adding the board needs to come up with a "multi-year solution" rather than a one-year solution when putting forth future budgets.

"We're all part of the problem, so we all need to be part of the solution," she said. "Everyone is going to need to take some kind of hit, [but the hit should be] as easy to swallow as possible."

Bourbeau joins newcomer Republicans Bob Cindric and Liz Gorgoglione as the third Board of Finance alternate. There are six full members of the board.

Man Transported by Life Star After Utility Pole Crash in Colchester

by Julianna Roche

After crashing into a utility pole, a Glastonbury man was carried by Life Star to the hospital for possible head injuries Friday, Nov. 24, police said.

East Hampton

Edward V. Siwicki Jr.

Edward "Ed" Siwicki Jr. of Port Charlotte, Fla., formerly of East Hampton, passed away surrounded by his loving wife and special friend Al Friday, Oct. 6. Ed was born Dec. 11, 1959, in New Britain. He was the son of June (Wright) Siwicki and Edward V. Siwicki Sr.

Ed was raised in Southington. He and his siblings enjoyed a wonderful life with loving and doting parents. Ed moved to East Hampton in 1976 to live with his Uncle Gary and Aunt Edie Nichisiti after losing his mom and dad. He went to high school in East Hampton and then attended Vinal in Middletown to study auto body repair. Ed worked for the State of Connecticut DOT until he retired in 2003. Ed was a member of the Haddam Neck and then East Hampton Volunteer Fire Departments.

He married Sharon Wallace and they led a rich life enjoying family and friends, camping, boating and riding motorcycles. Ed enjoyed holiday celebrations and gatherings and had a special love of Christmas cookies. He likely developed this fondness of sweets due to the amazing baking talents of his mom and sister Carol.

Ed was a member of the Sons of the American Legion both here in Marlborough and in Port Charlotte, Fla. He was very supportive and appreciative of our veterans and has many friends and relationships built due to the tremendous respect he has for our veterans.

After retiring to Florida, Ed and Sharon taught us all how to truly live and experience life. He continued his love of motorcycles and camping and they had many adventures together. He also explored his love and fascination with aviation and achieved a pilot's license and purchased a small private plane that he enjoyed immensely.

He surprised Sharon with an antique mustang for her birthday (something that she desired for years). He also met many other antique car enthusiasts and developed friendships with many of them. He became especially close to his friend Al, who shared his love for antique vehicles.

The passion did not stop there; Ed developed a love and appreciation for Hibiscus and joined the Hibiscus Society in Port Charlotte. He was especially proud of his beautiful Hibiscus flowers and shared photos often. He made many very special friends through this membership.

He is survived by his loving wife of 36 years, Sharon Siwicki of Port Charlotte, Fla.; sister Donna Siwicki and brother Wayne Johnson of California, sister Carol Reed of New Britain; extended family Uncle Gary and Aunt Edie Nichisiti, Darlene Dubowsky of East Hampton, Gary Nichisiti Jr. of Portland, and many nieces and nephews.

Eddy is especially close to Bella Siwicki of California, who is so much like his loving mom, and Scott and Lisa, who he saw daily as they were growing up.

He will be missed by many, and remembered for the life lessons he taught us, leading us by his example. Laugh often, give love freely, be kind, especially to those who really need it and pursue your dreams.

Please join us in a celebration Ed's life with family and friends Saturday, Dec. 9, at the American Legion Post 197 in Marlborough, CT at 1:00 p.m.
